Department of Agriculture

1. Agricultural Research Service

National Agricultural Library
10301 Baltimore Avenue
Beltsville, MD 20705-2351

Susan H. Fugate, Head, Special Collections

Special Collections of the National Agricultural Library (NAL) collects, preserves, and provides access to manuscripts, rare books, photographs, posters, and other unique materials.

Collection strengths include the fields of agriculture, horticulture, entomology, poultry sciences, botany, natural history, and agricultural history. Unique collections of note are the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) History Collection, the USDA Pomological Watercolor Collection, the Screwworm Eradication Collection, the Alvin L. Young Collection on Agent Orange, the Smokey Bear Collection, and extensive holdings in nursery and seed trade catalogs. Other unique resources include journals of agricultural pioneers and plant explorers, personal papers of USDA scientists, and records of agricultural organizations.

NAL Special Collections provides reference and research services and a variety of photo reproduction services. We publish finding aids and other miscellaneous publications in print and electronic formats. The majority of holdings are available for on-site use by appointment. See our website for details of hours and services.

Special Collections produces exhibits, both on-site and traveling. Most exhibits are featured on our website as well. Online exhibits, collection descriptions, finding aids, and a gallery of electronic images from Special Collections materials are available on our website.

3a. Forest Service—Headquarters

The Forest Service, which administers the nation's 155 national forests and 20 national grasslands, has five divisions: the National Forest System, Research and Development, State and Private Forestry, International Programs, and Business Operations. The public is most familiar with the National Forest System, which physically manages the 193 million acres under the agency's care. The agency has four levels of National Forest System offices. The Chief oversees the national level, which is headquartered in Washington, DC, and is typically called the Washington Office. Regional Foresters oversee the nine geographic regions, numbered 1 through 10 (Region 7 was eliminated some years ago), each encompassing several national forests and grasslands. The Forest Supervisor is the head of a national forest, which is divided into ranger districts managed by District Rangers. The 600+ ranger districts vary in size (50,000 acres to more than 1 million acres) and staff (10 to 100 people).

Washington Headquarters

Forest Service History Program [2011]

Office Head or Chief Historian

Dr. Lincoln Bramwell

Office Activities and Responsibilities

The U.S. Forest Service history project leads and coordinates history efforts across the agency. Due to the Forest Service's decentralized management structure, there are many historical efforts throughout the agency at any given time. The Chief Historian's office is located in the national headquarters in Washington, D.C. A web site is currently under construction to provide the public with a convenient location to access these efforts. The program works in close association with the agency's Heritage program, which is staffed almost exclusively by archeologists who handle historic preservation and interpretation and archaeological efforts such as Section 106 and NAGPRA compliance. The history program works with contractors and a number of partners to provide administrative history support, archival storage and administration, and outreach. The U.S. Forest Service operates one National Historic Site in Milford, PA. Named Grey Towers, the site is the former home of Gifford Pinchot, founder of the agency. The mansion is open to the public and operates both as a museum and a conservation meeting and training center.

3b. Forest Service–Intermountain Region
USDA Forest Service Intermountain Region
History Program
324 25th Street
Ogden, UT 84401 [2011]

Office Head or Chief Historian
Regional Heritage Program Leader

Office Activities and Responsibilities

The Intermountain Region (Region 4) of the USDA Forest Service encompasses Nevada, Utah, southern Idaho, southwest Wyoming, and small area of eastern California. It includes the Curlew National Grassland and 12 national forests (Ashley, Boise, Bridger-Teton, Caribou-Targhee, Dixie, Fishlake, Humboldt-Toiyabe, Manti-La Sal, Payette Salmon-Challis, Sawtooth, and Uinta-Wasatch-Cache). The Region 4 history program is somewhat informal, relying on support from the Regional Heritage Program, annual earmarks, and about 10 percent of one staff member's time. The primary focus of the program is the Region 4 History Collection. Originally managed by the Regional Information Office, the collection includes approximately 20,000 slides, 20,000 photographs, 150 boxes of documents and artifacts, 15 cabinets of maps and plans, 250 books, and numerous land classification and range analysis atlases. It continues to grow, mainly with donations from Forest Service retirees. With the help of volunteers and history students, the collection has been cataloged and archived. Numerous photos, maps, and documents have been scanned, thus facilitating responses to research requests from Forest Service staff, external scholars, and the public. The collection is open by appointment.

Other activities, dependent on funding and staff time, include developing a history program website, conducting oral history interviews, writing history reports, migrating an internal digital photo library to the internet, and creating displays.

Heritage Resource Management Program
Pacific Northwest Region 333 S.W. First Avenue P.O. Box 3623 Portland, OR 97208

James D. Keyser, Regional Archaeologist and Program
Leader E. Gail Throop, Historian

The purposes of the Heritage Resource Management Program in the U.S. Department of Agriculture Forest Service, Pacific Northwest Region are to facilitate inventory, evaluation, and Section 106 (NHPS) consultation on 19 National Forests and the Columbia River Gorge National Scenic Area, to preserve the values of those resources in situ or in other appropriate ways, to interpret and enhance those values for public enjoyment. Two popular aspects of the program are the Passport In Time and the Heritage Expeditions, where the public can become intimately involved in historic preservation projects. Preservation and rehabilitation projects to adapt historic buildings for recreation lodging make them available for public use.

Office Head or Chief Historian

Director of CMH and Chief of Military History, Mr. Robert Dalessandro. Chief Historian, Dr. Richard W. Stewart.

Staff: historians, editors, curators, and archivists

Office Activities and Responsibilities

The mission of the Center of Military History is to serve the Army and the Nation by insuring the complete and appropriate use of military history by the U.S. Army. To fulfill this mission, the Center prepares the official history of the Army, provides direct support to the Department of the Army Staff and Secretariat, and supervises or assists all historical programs within the Army at large. In so doing, the Center's historians, editors, curators, and archivists adhere to the highest professional standards of their respective academic fields. The Center also supports the use of military history by the Army's service schools in the teaching of strategy, operations, tactics, administration, and logistics and in the fostering of student appreciation of military history and its value in advancing military professionalism. To that end, many of the Center's products are designed for the Army's service schools and training centers. The Center supplements its traditional research, writing, and staff support work with strong programs for the army's field historians and curators. In the latter area, it continues to exercise direct control over all museum artifacts and some museums as well as over the Army art collection.

39b. U.S. Army Center of Military History, Defense Acquisition History Project

Dr. Elliott V. Converse

Initiated by the Historical Office, Office of the Secretary of Defense, the Defense Acquisition History Project is a six-year effort that will produce a five-volume chronological history of defense acquisition from the end of World War II to the present. A sixth volume will contain documentary material. The chronological volumes will focus on OSD-level policy direction and Service-level execution of defense acquisition. The target audiences for these volumes and the project's symposia and lectures are the U.S. Government's defense acquisition and history communities. The project began in October 2000 with the U.S. Army Center of Military History as its executive agent.

40a. U.S. Army Military History Institute

22 Ashburn Drive

Carlisle Barracks, PA 17013-5008

Colonel Russell J. "Skip" Hall, Director

The U.S. Army Military History Institute serves as the central repository for unofficial historical materials relating to the U.S. Army. MHI acquires, preserves, organizes, and provides pertinent sources of information to the official Army community and to the American public. The collection represents the finest and most comprehensive concentration of primary and secondary source materials on the history and development of the U.S. Army. Related materials on land warfare aspects of military history complement it. Nearly all materials are unique, rare, or not readily available elsewhere. The chronological strength of the holdings is from the Civil War forward. Most of this collection has been acquired by agency transfers and by individual donations from general officers, veterans, associations, and other private donors.

42. U.S. Military Academy

Department of History West
Point, NY 10996-1793

Col. Robert A. Doughty, Professor and Head

The Department of History imparts to all cadets an understanding of modern and military history that is central both to a liberal education and the cadets' professional development. Modern history explores the evolution of geopolitical, economic, social, and technological considerations that shape the national security policies and interests of the U.S. and other nations. Military history provides an appreciation for the historical use of violence, the evolution of the art of war and the military profession, and the place of the military in society.

Military History Detachments

In the field, Military History Detachments (MHDs) are assigned or attached to each theater Army command, Army component command, corps, division, separate combined arms brigade, armored cavalry regiment, and logistical or support command. Their primary mission is to ensure that records of engagements and battles are preserved for use in writing the official history of the campaign. They collect documents, maps, photographs, video and audio recordings, artifacts, and other historical material that might not be preserved through the records retirement process. They also conduct after action interviews and special projects for subjects not covered in regular reports and documents. They prepare monographs on selected operations, battles, activities, or problems and advise and assist the commander and the commander's records managers to ensure proper records management. The Army draws its MHDs from the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the Reserve components.

The Office of Army Reserve History is the professional historical agency for the U.S. Army Reserve. It provides high-quality historical services to capture, preserve, and publish the history, heritage, and material culture of the federal citizen soldier; support to bring the historical perspective to bear on current decision-making and future policy making and planning; historical input for innovative, relevant, and interesting leader development activities, including staff rides; and training and technical expertise for Army Reserve military history detachments, based on a three-year training cycle, to ensure their readiness for mobilization in support of combat and contingency operations. The Army Reserve Historian has general staff responsibility for execution of all component-wide historical functions to meet assigned missions. These functions are elements of the Army Reserve History Program, which are directed by the Army Reserve Historian through the specialized capabilities of the Office of Army Reserve History.

U.S. Army Reserve Regional Support Commands

In much the same manner as the Office of Army Reserve History provides historical services to the Chief, Army Reserve, the Office of the Chief, Army Reserve, and the Commander, US Army Reserve Command, professional historians or historical officers advise and support the staffs of the ten US Army [Reserve] Regional Support Commands (RSC). These field historians prepare annual histories, write monographs, support training of military history detachments, and manage historical records, oral history programs, and historical properties. The Army Reserve Historian has general staff responsibility for execution of all component-wide historical functions to meet assigned missions. Thus, the RSC history programs are essential elements of the Army Reserve History Program in general, which is directed by the Army Reserve Historian through the specialized capabilities of the Office of Army Reserve History.

The Military History Office of TRADOC is responsible for direction of the TRADOC Military History Program, comprised of the headquarters, 22 subordinate command history offices, and 23 Army museums. The U.S. Army Command and General Staff College is also a part of TRADOC.

Military History Program

The mission of the TRADOC Military History Program is to bring the historical dimension to bear in the command's decision making processes, preserve the corporate memory of TRADOC organizations, instruct in military history, and capture the material history of its organizations, installations, and the Army branches for which TRADOC has proponentcy. The program includes research and writing, classroom instruction, development of historical research collections, and preservation of the material record. Within the scope of the Army Historical Program, TRADOC publishes annual command histories, monographs, and special studies as governed by the TRADOC Historical Publications Plan. Studies and publications chart development of concepts, strategic and mobilization planning, doctrine, professional education and training, and resource planning. Classroom instruction aims specifically at enhancing professional education in military history. Research collections serve as the corporate memory of the command and its subordinate elements. Museums and their material collections train soldiers about the history and material culture of the branches and installations that make up the Army and serve the public as well.

The Combat Studies Institute (CSI) is one of five academic departments within the US Army Command and General Staff College (CGSC). CSI provides the foundation for military studies at the Army's Command and General Staff College (CGSC) by presenting instruction in military history. CSI instructors examine the evolution of military theory, the art of war, and the nature of battle with discussion groups of approximately 18 officer students. CSI also serves as TRADOC's proponent agency for historical studies. In this capacity, CSI is a TRADOC Forward Operating Agency (FOA) and has a Staff Ride section, a Research & Publications section, and a Military History Instructional Support Team.

Department of the Navy301. Naval History and Heritage Command

805 Kidder Breese St., SE
 Washington, DC 20374-5060

[Dec. 2011]

Office Head or Chief Historian

RDML Jay A. DeLoach, USN (Ret.), Director

Staff Positions

Deputy Dir., CAPT Jeffrey Gafney, USN
 Chief of Staff, CDR Jeffrey B. Barta
 Asst. Dir. for Commemorations, Patrick Burns
 Asst. Dir. for Museums and Collections, Dr. Joseph B. Thomas
 Asst. Dir. for Histories and Archives, Gregory J. Martin
 Senior Historian, Dr. Michael J. Crawford

Office Activities and Responsibilities

The Naval History and Heritage Command is the central source for the navy on naval history and heritage. Headquartered on the Washington Navy Yard (DC), the command includes 10 navy museums nationwide, including the Nautilus (the first nuclear-powered submarine), and a detachment that maintains the navy's oldest commissioned warship, USS Constitution.

The command manages the official history program of the United States Navy. A staff of historians, archivists, librarians, museum specialists, archeologists, and naval personnel preserves, analyzes, and interprets the service's experience and carries out historical activities.

The command oversees navy programs and instructions related to history; produces historical analyses, narrative histories, and reference works; advises the navy, other agencies, and the public regarding navy ship and aircraft wrecks, and administers grants, and internships. Extensive collections accessioned and maintained at the command's headquarters include archives, artifacts, photographs, artwork, and library.

The navy museums educate visitors about the history, customs, and traditions of the U.S. Navy. They offer education programs, tours, special events, summer activities, lectures and musical performances that are open to the public and free of charge. The museums include the following:

National Museum of the United States Navy, Washington, DC.
 U.S. Naval Academy Museum, Annapolis, MD.
 U.S. Navy Submarine Force Museum, Groton, CT.
 Naval War College Museum, Newport, RI.
 Hampton Roads Naval Museum, Norfolk, VA.
 National Naval Aviation Museum, Pensacola, FL.
 Great Lakes Naval Museum, Great Lakes, IL.
 U.S. Navy Seabee Museum, Port Hueneme, CA.
 Navy Museum Northwest, Keyport, WA/Bremerton, WA.
 Patuxent River Naval Aviation Museum, Patuxent, MD.

302a. United States Marine Corps History and Museums Division

1254 Charles Morris Street SE
Washington Navy Yard, DC 20374-5040

Col. John W. Ripley, USMC Ret., Director

The History and Museums Division of Headquarters, U.S. Marine Corps exists to collect, record, preserve, exhibit, and disseminate the cumulative operational and institutional experience of the Marine Corps. Its first priority is to provide a significant ingredient to be used in command decision making, as well as to orient, educate, and train Marines. The Historical Branch prepares a wide variety of publications; provides historical research and reference service for Headquarters Marine Corps, Marine Corps units, other military organizations and government agencies, active duty Marines, and the general public; ensures appropriate preservation of the Corps historical records; and conducts oral history interviews.

F.G. Gosling, Chief Historian and Federal Preservation Officer

The History Division provides the institutional memory for the Department of Energy. The Division provides support for the Office of the Secretary and other senior officials, including policy studies and background briefings on current issues. The Division answers requests for historical information, researches and writes the department's history, and provides historical input for departmental studies and special projects. The Division identifies and preserves documents and materials of historical significance, maintains the DOE Historical Research Center in Germantown, and makes records available to the public.

The Chief Historian also serves as the DOE Federal Preservation Officer, responsible for ensuring departmental compliance with the National Historic Preservation Act and the full range of cultural resource management statutes. Historic preservation initiatives focus principally on preserving and interpreting the physical legacy of the Manhattan Project and the Cold War nuclear weapons program.

Office Activities and Responsibilities

The FDA History Office maintains specialized expertise on the history of FDA and its predecessors and it meets a wide spectrum of information requests from all FDA centers, headquarters, and field offices, research scholars and authors, the press, students, filmmakers, consumers, other government agencies, regulated industry and their trade organizations, health professionals and their associations, consumers, and foreign sources.

The office is staffed with two Ph.D. historians who specialize in the history of medicine and pharmacy. The office conducts research and produces publications, briefing reports, and presentations pertinent to and interpretive of FDA. The office maintains an extensive in-office research file in support of this function. The office also maintains and continually enhances the FDA History web site.

The historians provide expertise in assessing the historical value of resources such as agency records, photographs, films, and other audio-visual records, as well as relevant rare or out-of-print monographs. FDA resources are leveraged through consultative partnerships with other offices within FDA. The historians collaborate on preservation issues related to key historical materials with external experts at the National Archives and Records Administration, the National Library of Medicine, the Smithsonian Institution, and other governmental, academic, and private institutions.

The FHO collects, processes, and preserves artifacts that capture the history of FDA's work, represent the commodities it regulates, and document the breadth of its responsibilities. When possible, the historians work to create educational exhibits for display in the new White Oak campus and are responsible for web-based exhibits in collaboration with other public and private institutions to educate agency employees, professional groups, and the public about the history and work of the FDA.

The FHO, in partnership with the National Library of Medicine, History of Medicine Division, NIH, maintains an ongoing and extensive oral history program. The program focuses on documenting FDA's institutional history as well as the evolution of policy and precedents as reflected and presented by personal interviews with agency employees as they leave FDA.

The goals of the history and heritage programs of the Fish and Wildlife Service include promoting the history of Fish and Wildlife Service through its former personnel, instilling pride in current Fish and Wildlife Service employees by presenting and preserving the history of the organization, and preserving invaluable parts of American environmental history which might otherwise be lost or neglected. The program is a key element of the National Conservation Training Center and a resource for both historical research (e.g., American historians, public historians, environmental historians) and scientific research (e.g., previous population records, ecological crises and responses, management techniques). The activities of the historian demonstrate that environmental challenges have a historical context that can be used to better understand current problems.

Office Activities and Responsibilities

The National Park Service History Office was established in 1931 under the direction of Chief Historian Vern Chatelain, and since that time, the office has directed and conducted research on national parks, national historic landmarks, park planning and special history studies, oral histories, and interpretive and management plans. The mission of the park history program is to provide advice in the evaluation for proposed new national parks, and to support the directorate, parks and regional offices in all matters relating to the history and mission of the National Park Service. We collect the National Park superintendent's annual reports, which have been produced since 1872. Since many of our parks were created to commemorate pivotal events, groups, and individuals in American history, the direction and advice the history office provides is critical to telling the most accurate and up-to-date stories in our parks. The office further assists groups of parks with similar themes—such as Civil War battlefields, World War II parks, and parks related to the Westward Expansion—in developing and interpreting their individual and collective stories. The program routinely responds to all questions regarding the wide and varied historic resources included in the national park system, and is responsible for providing a wide range of publications, studies and documents in print and electronically. The history staff manages the Maritime Heritage Program, the National Park Service Oral History Program, an extensive web site, on which over 4,000 studies, publications, and documents are available, and the National Register of Historic Places Program for parks.

Office Activities and Responsibilities

The Office of the Historian is staffed by professional historians who are experts in the history of U.S. foreign policy and the Department of State and possess unparalleled research experience in classified and unclassified government records. The Office's historians work closely with other federal government history offices, the academic historical community, and specialists across the globe.

The Office of the Historian is responsible, under law, for the preparation and publication of the official documentary history of U.S. foreign policy in the Foreign Relations of the United States series.

In addition, the Office prepares policy-supportive historical studies for Department principals and other agencies. These studies provide essential background information, evaluate how and why policies evolved, identify precedents, and derive lessons learned. Department officers rely on institutional memory, collective wisdom, and personal experience to make decisions; rigorous historical analysis can sharpen, focus, and inform their choices. The Office of the Historian conducts an array of initiatives, ranging from briefing memos to multi-year research projects.

The Office of the Historian also promotes the declassification of documents to ensure a complete and accurate understanding of the past.

The Office's public outreach activities include hosting scholarly conferences on key issues in the history of U.S. foreign policy, answering historical research questions, consulting with scholars, educators, and students, and working with high school teachers across the country to provide high-quality materials for classroom use.

Office Activities and Responsibilities

The National Cemetery Administration (NCA) History Program is a small interdisciplinary office initiated in 2001. The staff develops historic research about its 131 national cemeteries and 33 soldiers' lots—more than half of which date to the Civil War. This bureau of the Department of Veterans Affairs was created in 1973 when 82 national cemeteries were transferred from the Army; NCA continues to open or expand national cemeteries where the veteran population warrants it. The History Program manages research that documents the evolution of its physical property, capital assets, headstone/marker typologies and notable interments; it develops studies and resource documentation to guide historic preservation, including treatment of buildings, landscapes and nearly 1,000 monuments. It manages a collection of research material, papers, photographs, and artifacts associated with NCA properties to support an official administrative record and web-based histories. It makes oral history interviews of senior leadership and long-time employees.

Office Activities and Responsibilities

The Veterans Health Administration (VHA) History Office was established in May 2006. The VHA History Office collects, preserves, and promotes the heritage of the administration and its antecedents, which date to the Civil War when a National Soldiers and Sailors Asylum (later known as the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers) was authorized by President Lincoln on March 3, 1865. The History Office develops research projects and studies to document the administration's physical spaces, programs and activities, people, and events relevant to its legislative, social, and cultural history and impact; the evolution of federal health care for military veterans; and the history of American medicine. The History Office conducts research and provides subject matter expertise to VHA leaders, staff, and the public; develops articles and publications, outreach programs, and exhibitions for history educational purposes; establishes and manages a historical archive for the administration; provides archival preservation, museum collection, and historic preservation expertise or support to the Federal Preservation Office and VHA staff; collaborates with external organizations on projects relevant to veterans or the administration's history; and offers internships.

Office Activities and Responsibilities

The NSF history program was relaunched in 2006 after a hiatus of over a decade. The activities of the NSF history program can be divided into three categories: preservation, analysis and dissemination, and reference and scholarly liaison.

Preservation

The historian provides advice and support to the NSF records managers and other staff in identifying, preserving, and cataloging historically significant documentation and photographs, not otherwise covered by records schedules, for the use of staff and external scholars. A program to digitize these documents has just been launched. To ensure the preservation of information not captured in documents or photographs, the historian conducts an oral history program.

Analysis and Dissemination

The NSF history program plans to produce monographs on a wide variety of topics, ranging from the administrative history of the Foundation to the history of specific directorates and divisions and their impact on the development of specific disciplines. In addition, the NSF historian conducts research in response to specific requests for information by NSF administrators. The results of the historical analysis are disseminated in a variety of formats, including conferences, publications, and the NSF website.

Reference and Scholarly Liaison

The NSF historian fields many reference requests from staff, scholars, and the general public. He also maintains liaison with academic historians conducting research on the history of the NSF independently of the programs of the historian.

Office Activities and Responsibilities

The SSA Historian's Office maintains a large archival collection of Social Security-related documents, photographs, and audio and video materials. We also curate a small museum featuring artifacts from Social Security's history. Our main functions are to provide access to these assets, as well as providing research assistance to both internal government researchers and members of the general public. We have an active oral history program and do talks and presentations to interested outside groups. A core function of our office is to make our materials as accessible as possible by converting them to electronic formats and publishing them on our internet site.
